

Erasmus +

The new Erasmus+ programme aims to support actions in the fields of Education, Training, Youth and Sport for the period 2014-2020. Erasmus+ brings together and replaces several actions, including the previous Life Long Learning Programme (LLP) and its flagship Erasmus programme, which was originally launched in 1987.

University of Crete participation in Erasmus+ builds on a solid background of involvement in the previous Erasmus programme since 1987, with a long and growing list of 'Erasmus alumni' who have benefited from the mobility programmes. The University currently has over 200 bilateral inter-university agreements and participates in the following actions:

- Student mobility for studies
- Student mobility for traineeships
- Staff mobility for teaching
- Staff mobility for training
- The European Credit Transfer System and Accumulation System (ECTS)
- The Diploma Supplement (DS)
- Post-graduate programmes.

The International Relations Department (IRD) manages exchange and mobility programs of the University of Crete and acts as a contact point for Erasmus & other international students, researchers, visiting Academics and other staff.

Please visit the International Relations Department webpage to find out more about these and other opportunities at the University of Crete.

Incoming Erasmus students in the Department of Sociology

Courses are taught in Greek and there is currently no teaching program tailored to Erasmus students. This happens because the small number of incoming Erasmus students, prevents us from holding classes in English. Therefore, the Erasmus programme runs on the principle of one-to-one tuition and the establishment of small individual research projects, although classes on the Greek language are also offered at the University and our Erasmus students are more than welcome to participate in our regular classes and the various activities that take place in our University. Erasmus students are expected to write one or two essays in the context of each course, the topics of which are chosen after consultation each time with the relevant supervising member of staff. Mostly, essays are written in English as the majority of our staff members are in a position to supervise students in English, while there also alternative options, as there are staff members who are capable to supervise students in other European languages (French, German, and Italian). The minimum level of skills in English required of Erasmus students is B2. Students can choose their courses from the list of courses offered during the fall or spring semester of every academic year. The list of courses offered at the Sociology Department changes every year. However, core-courses normally run for several years in a row, while seminars are the most likely courses to change on almost a yearly basis. Erasmus students are allowed to choose from the entire range of the various types of courses offered every year (such as seminars, core-courses, optional courses, etc.), as long as they can reach an agreement with the member of staff who is in charge of each course regarding their essay topics and other relevant issues.

Erasmus students are also entitled to choose a couple of courses from other departments on the condition that they exhibit a certain degree of relevance with sociology, but again they will have to sort this out with the Erasmus coordinator upon arrival.
